Educating physicians and scientists for the future

Professor Dr. Lee Hartwell

Arizona State University, USA

During my career, I had to make several key decisions. As an undergraduate - what to study. As a scientist, what to research? And as a medical leader – where to encourage new developments. I will relate the considerations that led me to my decisions. Many of the students here will be challenged by the same questions in their careers. The world is now very different and I would like to think with you about what considerations might guide those decisions for me if I were making them now.
